COUNTRY PORTUGAL

In the green valleys of the countryside runs a river with the clearest water that divides two villages: the Old Village and the New Village. The first village is home to conservative and traditional residents, who live from the land; the second is made up of "new rural people," ecologists, sustainable farmers, young families, and artists. The construction of a dam will bring benefits to some and problems to others, such as rising waters and, ultimately, the submersion of one of the villages.

Mia has just abandoned her promising career as a lawyer in the city and moved temporarily with her parents, where she will find two villages in constant war, amplified by the construction of a dam that will destroy one of them. On the other side of this project is Renata, with a secret revenge plan to destroy both villages. But it's also the Mayor's son, Afonso, a passionate engineer who believes on the benefits of the dam. Even on different sides of the barricade, Mia and Afonso can't help but fall in love. Will they be able to build new bridges and burn old ones in the name of it?
